TOPICS:

Capacity Management

Accurately predicting, managing, and maximizing the true capacity of your health system's resources is more important than ever. Identifying and deploying inpatient, outpatient and community staffing options, having real-time acute care inventories and predictive upcoming availabilities of non-hospital resources, knowing upcoming rural transfer needs, and activating the routine use of demand management delays or reassignment tactics will be explored. The use of incentives and disincentives as well as predictive analytics/ AI will highlight this agenda.

Team Based Care

These sessions will explore the models, appropriate uses, roles of team members, leadership requirements (for MD's, PA's and NP's) and compensation considerations for various types of team-based care. From primary care to specialized services, where is it working and where has its promise not panned out? Can it thrive within a fee-for-service/RVU world, or is value/risk-based environment the only fertile soil? If patient-centered, how are systems assessing and gaining patient/ family involvement, capabilities, and activation? Finally, what role can telehealth and other technologies play?
