Introduction

The Pittsburgh Schizophrenia Conference is an annual meeting at which the advances in schizophrenia research and treatment are reviewed by experts in the field. This year's meeting will be held in person at the Sheraton Station Square.

Educational Objectives

At the completion of this program, participants should be able to:

1. Describe the impact of negative symptoms in schizophrenia and evaluate the use of Behavioral Activation interventions, including implementation strategies, and evidence supporting their efficacy for promoting active lifestyles and functional recovery.
2. Evaluate the role of muscarinic signaling in schizophrenia and apply evidence-based strategies for selecting and integrating newly approved non-dopaminergic therapies into individualized treatment plans.
3. Assess and implement long-acting injectable antipsychotic therapies by selecting appropriate candidates, medications, and administration strategies, while applying evidence-based resources and best practices to improve patient outcomes and treatment adherence.
4. Describe the impact of genetic risk factors on the development, pathophysiology, and symptoms of schizophrenia and how these might be useful in improving prevention and treatment approaches.
5. Evaluate candidates for anticholinergic deprescribing and apply evidence-based strategies and decision-support tools informed by results from a multisite implementation trial.

Who Should Attend:

The conference is designed to disseminate the latest clinical and research findings to a wide audience: psychiatrists and other mental health clinicians, including nurses, pharmacists, social workers, psychologists, service coordinators, researchers, patients and their relatives, mental health policy administrators and others who intend to keep current regarding treatment and research in schizophrenia.

His career in clinical research led to major advancements in the treatment of individuals with schizophrenia and his work continues to be recognized both nationally and internationally. In addition to his research endeavors, Professor Hogarty was an incredibly talented teacher and mentor who played a significant role in the career development of many respected researchers and clinicians in the field.
